This bible is much more than just a Giant Print Compact. It is a well designed, very readable, single column bible. Why does it matter that it is single column? Well, For some time now, bibles have been designed so they are physically slimmer and smaller. The result is thinner paper, and double columns (more columns = more words on a page). Tradition has now set in and people are used to seeing a bible in a double column format. This is unfortunate simply because single columns are better for reading at any length (which is why novels, etc, are designed in a single column format), but you cant have your cake and eat it too so since it is cool to have an anorexic bible they are all double column with thin paper. Which is why I am excited about Zondervan taking a chance designing a small, fat bible with a simple interior design...it is enjoyable...Details: Paper: Better than average. I would guess that it is 24lb. Ghosting is not bad, but I have found that this is subjective to some degree. Different lighting conditions obviously affects ghosting but with the large type it is very easy to read in almost any lighting condition. Text: Font size is 12/13 (another words it is not small...but not clown big). It is reasonably dark and crisp. Font types can be subjective, but this doesn't bother me (although I would not call it elegant). The text spreads nicely across the page at about 10-12 words per line, which is ideal for readability. Size & Binding: I would call it a Personal Size not Compact. The size is roughly 5x7.5" and it is thick...study bible thick which feels great in the hand. The extra weight adds to the limpness and it easily lies open. Nothing extra special about the cover. I have the Sierra/Black which is nice.
